

SAFETY MONDAY

January 30, 2012

SUPER BOWL XLVI Are you and your workers ready?

The New England Patriots and the New York Giants will play in the Super Bowl on Sunday, February 5. What does that have to do with safety? All across the United States, at homes, parties and bars, people will have a drink or two (or more) while watching the game, and stay up late. This includes the men and women who handle the trash and recyclables and maintain the trucks. Drivers and helpers who have to report for work the following day, especially those who need to start before the sun comes up, should keep their work-related duties in mind while enjoying the game.

Managers and supervisors should remind workers not to overdo it on Sunday, are encouraged to personally greet drivers and other employees the Monday after the game, and monitor their pre-trips, and make sure all workers are fit for duty.

How employees behave off-the-job can have a dramatic effect on their productivity and safety while working. Someone who does drugs or is an alcoholic is a danger to himself, his fellow employees, and customers, and should not be allowed behind the wheel of a garbage truck. This is true the day after the Super Bowl – and every other day of the year!
